

David J Blixt – Media Kit

Short Bio

At age 13, David J Blixt witnessed Michael Jordan's earliest Chicago-area game, played in a small high school gym — a rare moment that few know about. Decades later, he found the lost ticket and program from that game, sparking a lifelong passion that fused basketball history with music and storytelling. This discovery inspired his latest work, the song and AI-powered video "Alien Invasion," blending the energy of that night with a hopeful vision for humanity's future.

The ticket is the only known to exist, PSA 1/1. Blixt continues to share this unique journey through music, video, and community engagement.

Long Bio

At 13 years old, David J Blixt attended Michael Jordan's first Chicago-area game — a rare and historic event played in a high school gym, an experience that would profoundly shape his life. For over 40 years, the ticket and program from that game remained lost, until he rediscovered this one-of-a-kind piece of sports memorabilia.

This ticket is not just a collectible but a symbol of inspiration. It fueled Blixt's passion for storytelling, art, and music, culminating in the creation of "Alien Invasion," an original song and AI-powered video that channels the spirit of that unforgettable night and extends a message of hope and renewal for our world.

In addition to the personal journey and creative work, Blixt offers rare archival footage — including his 1997 VHS video titled "The Bulls Are Rockin' " - aired on NBC TV. This unique footage captures the enduring legacy of Michael Jordan and the Bulls, adding depth to the narrative.

Today, David combines this unique history, music, and multimedia storytelling to connect with audiences around the world. He invites fans and media alike to explore and share in the journey, the ticket, and the music that continues to inspire.

For interviews, collaborations, or more information, please contact:
djblixt1@gmail.com

Press Release Highlights

- Rare, one-of-one ticket found from Michael Jordan's third pro game after 40 years
- Ticket rediscovery sparked a creative journey blending sports history and music
- Release of Alien Invasion, an AI-powered music video and song inspired by the ticket
- Archival 1997 footage titled Bulls Are Rockin' features the Chicago Bulls and Alien Invasion
- A unique fusion of basketball legacy and futuristic hope, shared through multimedia storytelling